The recent downturn in the economy has tightened the finances of families nationwide. Budgeting, debt management, and managing credit scores have all become increasingly important. However, many recent graduates and young adults are unprepared, and poor financial decisions are costing them millions of dollars.

What roles should educators, family members, and financial institutions play in improving financial literacy in the U.S.? Do you feel that you have been adequately prepared to deal with the financial issues you may face in the near future, and if not where would you turn for advice?
